illustration and writing contest- now and then

Do you remember any games you played as a child? You may say those console games like computer, ipad, iphone or Switch. But have you ever played the real games like hopscotch, marbles, sandbag, wave drum or kendama?

About forty years ago, children played those real games with their neighbor after school around the alley. However, parents nowadays worry about their kids' safety so they always stay home or pick them to cram school. In long-term, not only children but also adults may afraid of building interpersonal relationships with each other. Finally, people no longer talk to others and the distance between people become farther and farther.

To sum up, although technology brings people convenience and virtual interest, it may too advanced to lose virginity from them.
